

12) This is what happened when a 75mm recoilless rifle shell hit the radiator of an SP Jeep. The strike team had abandoned the Jeep for the safety of a bunker just prior to the hit. Our mascot, a black and white, short hair, mix breed female (about 10 pounds worth) was killed with shrapnel. She was pretty special to me as she ran to my bunker on the flight line one other time and jumped in with me. We could hear one of the rounds whistling in, and when it could not be heard, she crawled inside my jungle fatigue shirt between me and the sand! I never did figure out how she got in that small of a space, as I was really making love to the ground. Any way, the round went off about five yards behind us. I think the jeep-killing was in the next attack.

13) Close up of the "Security Police" sign beneath the jeep's windshield.

14) Two AP's, I don't remember the one on the left, but the guy with the cigarette is Harper.

15) This one is three of us who hung out together a lot when not on duty. Sleep deprivation makes anything seem funny! Photo: Left to Right, John Sharpe, Duke Windsor, and Markham. We were ready for just about any kind of duty at the time of the pix.
