10) View north of the perimeter minefield, and town of Đông Hà Air Field beyond.

11) Perimeter Bunker #31, on the southeast corner of the base.

12) US Army Battery twin 40mm track in position on the east berm perimeter.

13) Underground Security Police Command Post. It had communication with our posts by radio and landline. Also communication with the Marine CP (Rear Point), and Đà Nẵng Air Base. Note the old French Bunker next to it.

14) East berm perimeter, on the right, with the US Army twin 40mm track barely visible in the distance along the berm's top. Barbed wire and minefield is on the left.

15) View of east perimeter minefield and Highway #1 in the distance along the treeline. Take Highway #1 right to go to Quang Tri City. About 15 miles south. Quang Tri City was the provincial capital of Quang Tri Province. It was flattened by NVA artillery and tanks during the 1972 Easter Offensive, and no longer exists. Đông Hà Air Field is now the capital of Quang Tri Province.

16) A small ville just outside perimeter on the northeast corner of the base.

18) Our Mascot, Josephine.

19) Đà Nẵng Air Base, August 1966. A1C Terry Sandman at what used to be called "Camp Đà Nẵng". In the background can be seen the tent living quarters. When I came back through Đà Nẵng in July 1967 this area had two story barracks on the site. There was a VC rocket attack on the Air Base my first night back, in July of 1967, and one of the two story barracks took a direct hit. Also, the Ammo Dump took a hit that made one heck of an explosion!

20) Đà Nẵng Air Base August 1966. The barber shop at Camp Đà Nẵng.
