

WE WHO SERVED WILL NEVER FORGET OUR BROTHERS

There are many things said about us who served,
By the cowards who ran away across the border
To hide out in Canada with all the other cowards.

They hid under rocks and in the sewers like rats
Then when the war was finally done and over with
They came back here to point their fingers at us.

They spouted off their hatred for those who served
Trying to make us feel guilty because we had fought
When in reality it was they who had been the cowards.

Ever since then they have spewed out their rantings,
Calling us baby killers and many other hateful names
Then they tried rewriting what really happen there.

Trying to revise history to fit their guilty needs,
Because deep down inside of them they know the truth—
That they were the ones who had run away to Canada

It's hard to tell it, as it was, when you weren't there,
When they ran from their own country as COWARDS!
So it doesn't matter what they may say about any of us.

Because no matter how hard they try to twist the facts
It won't change history, and we'll never feel any guilt
That we heard the pleas for help from those who called.

And all of their rantings just prove they were cowards
They were then and always will be cowards in my eyes;
They had nothing but contempt for those much braver men.
