Đà Lạt, some 300 kilometres northeast of Hồ Chí Minh City, is one of the most un-Vietnamese towns of Vietnam. It is located some 1,500 metres above sea level, and known for the beauty of its rolling hills, misty lakes and fragrant pine forests, in the southern reaches of the Annamese Mountain Range. It was not built by Vietnamese or Cham kings, but by the French colonial masters, who preferred to retreat to Đà Lạt from former Saigon during the hot season. The town, which today counts 130,000 inhabitants, was founded only in 1897. The French colonial administration and French traders built large European-style villas to create an atmosphere reminding of France. In the middle of the town, a small lake (Xuan Huong), and to the North of it a golf course, were laid out. Many of the villas have survived the Vietnam war undamaged and give the town a unique appearance. In the area around the town are several beautiful waterfalls.

1) Đà Lạt, Lang Bian Mountain. The most beautiful and scenic in Vietnam.

2) Đà Lạt Valley.

3) & 4) Đà Lạt Forrest. 5) Đà Lạt Waterfall.

6) Đà Lạt Waterfalls.
